From the 1970s to the 1990s, the number of people who have been convicted of a crime in the United States has increased significantly. In 1970, there were approximately 100,000 people in the United States who had been convicted of a crime. By 1990, this number had increased to approximately 200,000. This increase is due to a number of factors, including changes in the legal system, changes in the definition of crime, and changes in the way that crime is reported.
